IN A FEW WORDS

Dear Triathletes,

What a season it's been! A very wet spring, suddenly summer and fall is chilling us quickly. But none of it is enough to keep us from doing what we've grown to love; Swim, Bike & Run! See ya out there.

Sincerely,

Mark Wilson
President, HVTC
Director-Total Immersion Triathlon Camps

FEATURED ATHLETE: Doug Thompson

[This was Doug's exact response to the Featured Athlete questions that were sent to him. So, it just seemed right to leave it as it was.]

Athlete? It's been a long time since I've been called an athlete, so here's the story of Doug.

I was born and raised on Long Island by two great parents. My dad opened his first restaurant when I was born in 1966. He was also a skydiver and an avid runner. Since time with dad was limited, I would work at the restaurant during the weeknights to see him, or join him on runs around our local park when possible. I remember at an early age enjoying distance running.

My athletic career was short. In grammar school, I played 4 years of football with the East Rockaway Raiders. There were only 13 of us on the team so everyone played. I had a blast in four years with lots of mud and dirt, three broken fingers and two MVP's. I also played baseball and bowled on the weekends.

After grammar school, I was fortunate enough to be accepted to Chaminade High School in Mineola (all boys, suit and tie, great education, priests, nuns, the whole nine yards). I had a great three years in high school football. In spring, I ran track but preferred running for fun.

My senior year of high school, my 'athletic' days were over. Divorce, a job, a girlfriend, drums, Van Halen and Ozzy encompassed my life, not to mention that at 150 pounds, I was getting run over in football. So off to SUNY New Paltz I went to be closer to my dad who taught at the Culinary.

I attended SUNY for three years and played lacrosse. After my father's unfortunate passing, I left school and joined a punk rock band called Murphy's Law. I recorded some records and toured the states and Europe a couple of times with the Beastie Boys, the Ramones, Red Hot Chili Peppers and the Mighty Mighty Bosstones. It was a great time in my life. When I was off the road, I worked at the Main Street Bistro in New Paltz. Years later, after I realized that the music business was not good for my well-being, I purchased the Bistro from Steve Axelson. That was 1993. During that time, I got married to my wife, Teresa, and I now have two children, Nicholas and Lauren. I also purchased the Bistro Mountain Store in Gardiner from Louie Benson two years ago.

So where does the triathlon story fit in? Well, for the past 20 years I would train sporadically for the local 5K's or 10K's, then tail off every summer. Sure, I would still ride my mountain bike, read the runner magazines for inspiration and snowboard in the winter, but as I got older, I felt I was getting deeper into the business rut. I realized that running my businesses became more important than my physical health. But as of last November, this realization would come to an end.

At the Bistro, someone mentioned the HVTC to me and how much they had enjoyed triathlons. I was curious so I checked out the website and figured I'd send in the dues and give it a shot in the spring. When spring arrived I was excited to participate in the first lake swim. How embarrassed was I when I did not have a wet suit! (I would have swum anyway, but after Mark's chat with me, I decided against it). The short run after that swim was motivational. I was running with other runners who were stronger and faster than me and spoke passionately about their sport. I then decided this is what I wanted to do.

So off I went and bought a wetsuit and picked out a bike. My first sprint tri in June was my first triathlon ever. I was pretty nervous, but realized it was a feeling I have not felt since a high school football kick off. So off I went. I swam way too fast and was basically hyperventilating during the transition. My ride (on my mountain bike) felt as if I were carrying a ton of bricks. I thank Bill for the polite conversation as well as directions. I was relieved to get off the bike and take off running. Finally, I was happy just to be finished.

The triathlon bug had officially hit me, but alas the summer Bistro crunch was coming to haunt me once again. I was determined still to train hard, but over training and the Bistros took a toll on me physically and mentally. I was lucky to be going on vacation the week I decided to take a break from everything.

During that time, I read books and realized that I was on the right path but I needed a lot fine tuning, a better diet, more hours of sleep and more quality training, not quantity. When I returned from vacation, I started my own seven-week plan from the Gale Bernhard book of endurance training. I feel great!

My one goal this year is to finish the Danbury Triathlon, an Olympic distance race, in a decent time. After that, I am going to train (and snowboard) in the winter and gear up for the 2004 season. I have always wanted to compete in the S.O.S, so that's my 2004 goal. Then next year, maybe a half ironman and in years, maybe an Ironman. Believe me, I'm not in any rush!

So in closing, to answer some of Mark's other questions: my wife thinks I'm always nuts, so the triathlon training has only put me in a higher degree of nuttiness with her and my friends; my favorite food is Count Chocula with chocolate soy milk: Crazy triathlon story? Those dogs on the back roads of the last sprint triathlon scared the hell out of me! How do I feel when I do triathlon? Peaceful, relaxed and glad that there are no phones by the lake.

Thanks to all club members and Mark for your words of wisdom, inspiration and patience with the new guy. [Thanks, Doug!]

IRONMAN TRIATHLON WORLD CHAMPIONSHIP

The highly acclaimed broadcast of the Ironman Triathlon World Championship makes an unprecedented move to prime time on NBC, Saturday December 6, 2003.

With the move of the Ironman Triathlon World Championship to a prime time spot comes a new format. The Ironman will be presented in two parts beginning with a "lead-in" show airing from 5:00-6:00 p.m., and the signature presentation airing from 8:00-9:00 p.m. across the country.

The Ironman Triathlon first aired on television in 1980 as part of ABC's Wide World of Sports. In 1991, the broadcast was moved to NBC where it became a stand-alone program. Over the years, the Ironman Triathlon production has won nine Emmy awards and has received 31 Emmy nominations. The broadcast has also won five consecutive International Monitor Awards for global excellence. (Thanks, Rich Barkan!)

PAPE'S PARTICULARS

By Bill Pape

Race Attitude

Saturday, when I was doing the bike portion of the Granite Ledges Triathlon in New Hampshire, I was a little nervous. The pavement was wet at the beginning, my calf was hurting bad, and I had not done an Olympic distance triathlon in a while. I rode by a cemetery with a big sign carved in rock over two rock pillars, "Homeland." I thought of a joke, and, luckily, the graveyard had two of the same signs, one at an entrance we were just approaching. As I pulled along side another rider, I motioned toward the graveyard sign and said, "Now, that's real homeland security." He agreed, "Yeah, nothing's going to happen to you in there."

At that point in the race, I was passing a group of 40 year-olds and was trying to ease the tension of the relationship during the race as well as my own fears for the rest of the race. I had just passed one before we were narrowed to one line by cones around a turn, and I had apologized for then slowing down in the narrow lane, saying, "The older you get the more afraid you get of falling." He gave a likewise friendly reply, "I am just glad I am not in your age group."

This point of this whole article is my homeland security joke, which I thought was pretty good, but which I thought Mark would not allow me to put in the newsletter, for just a two-sentence article. So, I had to develop some other bs to fit around it, and here it comes.

I made a few other jokes at the beginning of this race, and, during the run portion, I said a few "nice job"s to other runners. This approach to fellow competitors contrasts to what I learned earlier.

Once, on the high school track bus, the coach, who was not a good guy, came on after the track meet and cursed us out. He said, "What, do you guys think we rented a bus to go to an English garden tea party?" "I saw several of you talking to the other school team members before your event and laughing. If you want to do that, do it after you beat them to death, not before you compete. We're not here to make friends; we're here to win. Don't let me see you do that again."

Volume III, Issue No. 9 September 2003

Later, as an adult, a mature-age adult in his 40s, my training friend and I used to make a list of our closest competitors at the beginning of each season. We assigned them derisive names and promised each other we would humiliate them for any thought they had of being equal to us. About one guy who told us after a race that he fell behind us after his drink system on the bike failed, we said, "He lost his hair, his girlfriend, his water and then this race," referring to other bad aspects of his life. We named another guy in our running club, who fancies himself a coach and whose wife threw him out of their house, "Hobo," joking that he was homeless.

Wait a minute, it is going to get worse now. When I went into a dog/human running race, which a woman in New Jersey was nice enough to put on, and won it with Chopin, he and I started out in third place after the first turn. He went crazy, not wanting to be behind the leader, and he pulled me up to the dog in front and bit his leg. I wrote to the running club that Chopin exemplified the proper race attitude. When my training partner and I were running on a snowy day and four young hoods in a car drove too close to us, I banged on their car with my fist. They stopped and got out to chase us. I showed a lot of courage, because my training partner had come from karate, which he quit because he realized he was trying to hurt people. After I remembered he was with me, I called them a few names. Once when I was running alone in the dark in the urban area near me, a car cut me off and I banged on the trunk. The guy got out, and, before I knew it, he punched me in the face, breaking my new glasses and leaving me in the middle of the street having lost consciousness for a second or two. What was more embarrassing as I ran to the hospital without my glasses, to see if I had any concussion, was that I was jogging home from group therapy. This was similar to my coming home from church on the bike. I may have just shed a tear or two over some nice thought in church, when I rode through traffic and was already calling out a few curses to idiots trying to kill me, moments after well-wishing the minister for his sermon. And, as recently as a week or two ago, my wife asked who the guy was who said "Hi" to me at a race, and I replied, "Who knows, it's not for me to know them, it is their problem to know me." I used to drive to local races and see two young guys with nice bikes on their roofs. I would say to myself, "That's okay, once the gun goes off, I am going to rip their hearts right out of their chests."

My training partner was probably the first to lighten up. He and I are very thin and are heavy-people-prejudice-challenged. We saw a heavy woman running toward us one day and, knowing each other's minds, did not even have to put voice the jokes in our minds. He said a nice "Hi" to her like a fellow competitor and chastised me, "Hey, she is working hard to challenge her body, just like we are, more than half the people don't do anything, she's on our side, good for her."

I started thinking it might be good for me to be nice. It helps me with my pre-race tension. Being in the old age group for the swim wave, it is always easy to think of a joke for the guys next to you. During the Granite Ledges race, I was really struggling on the run just to do the distance. At the turn-around, two guys dressed in pirate costumes were yelling encouragement to participants. I turned around by them and said, "Thank you, gentlemen, I mean, pirates." They laughed, and I started running better. I realized I could speed up without hurting my calf by shuffling with quick, short steps, and I started passing people. Runners called out to me, "Good job." I noticed some runners I thought could use encouragement, like some young women filling their Speedo suits and then some, and called back encouragement to them and other runners.

I think Julie, my wife, does not have a competitive enough attitude. She does not approach the race with a "kill them" attitude and she putters through, even though she thinks she is working hard. She does not know how to get to the next pain level, like I do, from my high school track experience of being yelled at and pushed.

So, what is the right attitude to race with? How can you balance a desire to win or race well in competition, which means "against" others, with a good feeling toward others, giving a good feeling toward your self? Desire requires some passion. During the 70s, I remember some advocacy for "race against yourself and the limits of mankind." Right. I knew then that put one of the self-racers against me, who was sharpened by trying to beat others, and they would be meditating on the memory of seeing me fade forward. Others seem to challenge us more than we do ourselves. Here, the article ends. I will not try to figure it out. I already got my main joke in at the start, and now Mark is stuck with it.
